Half Day Tour

The two hour street art walking tour in Salt River, Cape Town covers 3 km (just short of 2 miles) and covers over 55 amazing public artworks with more than 40 murals made by South African artists. The route goes through Cape Town's old working class neighborhood of Salt River, an area that became South Africa's first industrial hub outside of mining, when the clothing manufacturing industry became established at the end of the 1800's.

Recently a transformation of some old industrial premises has brought its benefits, but residents are wary of the threat of gentrification which has already affected some similar neighbourhoods in the city with drastic consequences for the poor.

The walk meanders through Salt River's light industrial area as well as the friendly residential streets where a strong sense of neighbourhood can be felt. Both areas have been brightened by art works, most of them created as part of the annual International Public Art Festival, guided by themes which encourage positive messaging to start conversations among locals and visitors alike.
